Wanda Pimentel

Rio de Janeiro, 1943 – Rio de Janeiro, 2019

Wanda Pimentel was born in Rio de Janeiro in 1943, where she lived until her death in 2019. Pimentel's practice is distinguished by a precise, hard-edge quality encompassing geometric lines and smooth surfaces in pieces that often defy categorization as abstract or figurative. In the late 1960s and early 1970s, her paintings depicted domestic spaces and everyday objects in bright colors, in stylistic alignment with Brazilian new figuration, mainly through the influence of her teacher Ivan Serpa.

The beginning of Pimentel's trajectory coincides with the onset of a long period of oppression and state-sponsored violence in Brazil after 1964 when the military dictatorship was instituted and took hold through 1985. The parallel highlights how her work both reacts to and undermines the stifled atmosphere felt throughout so-called "years of lead", marked by increasingly insulated communities, conservative societal values, steep political barriers and a turbulent relationship to national identity. In this sense, Pimentel's work functions as a visual code wrought under oppressive conditions as much as a map toward resignifying isolation.

This isolation, furthermore, is deeply entwined with the feminine condition in Brazil's patriarchal hierarchy at the time, and also with the country's place within the global functioning of art-historical movements and discourse from the 1960s onward. While at first glance Pimentel's work appears to tie into the Pop Art repertoire of mass-produced pictorial data and synthetic color palettes, her own take on the visual syntax of Pop renders these industrialized elements in an aura of menace, as if they were not as readily appropriated as their counterparts in the global North.
